AERONAUT IN DIRE PERIL.

When Goodale's Rudder Broke He Tried to Alight in River.

HACKENSACK, June 23.—Frank Goodale, who flew over Broadway in his dirigible last night, landed early this morning. He was rescued near the river edge under the cliffs at Fort Lee after his rudder had broken. A launch sent out in search of the uncontrollable airship finally located Goodale by the noise of his motor.

"I could have landed several times along the Palisades," said Goodale. "I realized that I might wreck the balloon and possibly kill myself. I wanted to alight in the river, where I could sit on the rear end of my frame and keep my engine out of the water until a boat came along. The high cliff seemed to create a suction and drag me in toward them. I could touch the rudder, but I thought the boat would start to descend. As I neared the shore I saw men and yelled to them. One was Lester Truxx, who followed me all along the river and finally succeeded in grabbing my trailing line, and dragging me to a safe landing."

BEES ON COP'S BALD HEAD.

PATROL WAGON CALLED OUT WHEN THE QUEEN TOOK A RAMBLE.

"I fail to discover anything in the police manual that calls for a cop to corrall escaped bees and I'll never again respond to such a summons," said Policeman James Looby of Bayonne yesterday as he tenderly rubbed a tall swelling atop his bald head caused by many stings.

Several hundred bees fled from their hive at the home of Charles Higgins, 30 West Thirty-fourth street, when they discovered that the queen bee had gone off on a personally conducted outing all by herself.

The queen sought quite a tree opposite the First National Bank at Broadway and Thirty-third street and there a great cloud about the tree and attracted a crowd of people.

The bees had settled down quietly on a limb. Edmund Isbell shook it and the queen bee and all following dropped into a box.

Small boys followed Isbell as he walked away with the box of bees and one of them threw a stone that fell into the box. In a jiffy the air was full of bees and half a dozen others were badly stung. Somebody telephoned police headquarters and the patrol wagon with Looby in charge arrived.

Looby was hot and he removed his helmet and then the bees lit on his head. They left him with reluctance to enter their box again.

The other fled across the back of the house with his whip furiously as he saw the taxicab straining behind him.

The man did just before he was seen to take a revolver from his pocket and throw it away. In the West Thirty-seventh street station, Captain Edward Barron of the station, Captain of the 14th Precinct, called the man over to the station and had him arrested.

The contest was held at Elk Park, Palisades street and Wyckoff avenue, in a large hall. The players were fended off against noise and heat and guarded from interruption by trainers and pianoists sitting "trainers' quarters," no admittance.
